

How will the district determine if my child needs additional academic or behavioral support?

A Child Study Team is assigned to each school in the district. The team includes a learning disabilities teacher-consultant, a school psychologist or behaviorist, and a school social worker.

- Parents, general education, and special education teachers are key players in determining special education programs and services.
- Child Study Team members also serve as resources to the Student/Teacher Assistance and Response (STAR) and Intervention and Referral Service (I&RS) Teams at each school, which develop and implement academic and behavioral interventions and strategies to support “at risk” general education students who demonstrate early signs of academic or behavioral difficulty.
